Murdoch signals push into education

News Corp chief in digital lessons move
Vision for learning outlined in G8 talk

By Tim Bruneau in Paris

Rupert Murdoch signalled that News Corp, the media group he leads, is to make a significant new push into the education technology market, in a high-profile speech to the e-G8 conference of Internet entrepreneurs and European policy-makers in Paris.

Describing education as the "last frontier" of the digital revolution, Mr Murdoch outlined a vision for personalised learning and more engaging lessons delivered by the world's best teachers to thousands of students via the Internet.

"The same technologies that transformed every other aspect of modern life

McDraw-Hill. Such companies have already invested heavily in digitising their materials and moving to more personal learning and assessment. In spite of Mr Murdoch's assertion that "today's classrooms look almost exactly the same as it did in the Victorian age".

News Corp first indicated that it was taking the education technology market more seriously in November with the acquisition of the e-G8 Forum, a New York company that tracks students' performance through mobile devices and assessment software for IBM.

It indicated then that further acquisitions would follow, even as it said to spend $100m or more on the acquisition of the 61 per cent of British Sky Broad-casting it does not own.

In an impassioned address to delegates at the e-G8 Forum, headed by Nicolas Sarkozy, the French president, ahead of the G8 later this week, Mr Murdoch outlined the assembled technology executives to do for education what they have already done for the media and advertising world.

"Now we need to... make mathematics sticky, to micro-target the right grade levels who might want to be personal and to personalise the content for each student," he said. To engage young people in new ways, "the key is to make it fun... not a computer or a tablet or some other device".

Fast food: FreshDirect is planning to expand after better technology helped it increase profitability.

Online grocers gain ground in US

News analysis
Doubts remain about expanding beyond the suburbs, writes Alan Rapaport

The online grocery business was hailed a decade ago as a decade ago, when venture capitalists poured money into the sector, with 30 per cent growth last year. It is now a national phenomenon.

There is no going to be a lot of people focused on it and not enough to get the model right.

Increased competition for food delivery has been a hot topic in the industry. In March, a FreshDirect rival, a New York City-based company, was acquired by a private equity firm. The company, which was founded in 1998, made its debut in New York City. It was acquired by a private equity firm.

According to Rapaport, online food shopping is more feasible now than it once was because of greater broadband access and the spread of smartphones, which has made buying even more convenient.

The consumer is arriving at the moment, says Alice Bernstein, chief operating officer and head of marketing at Peapod. "In 2009, it might have been too early."

Meanwhile, some analysts argue the economic model can only work in areas of high population density, where delivery is more efficient and people rely less on cars. "At brick-and-mortar stores, the expense is not too high because they are self-service," says Susantha Maduranga, an online grocery analyst at Forrester.

"Online, you need to have trucks and every single order needs to be touched by several humans."

John Deighton, a professor specialising in consumer behaviour at Harvard Business School, doubts the success of online grocery. "The success of online grocery is not going to be a simple matter of translating the brick-and-mortar model into the online world," he says. "The success of online grocery is not going to be a simple matter of translating the brick-and-mortar model into the online world."

Microsoft launches handset software upgrade

By Paul Taylor in New York

Microsoft launched a new version of its Windows Phone 7 smartphone operating system in New York on Tuesday, announcing that it would power the first of a new generation of Nokia handsets due to launch late this year.

The two technology companies in April finalised a deal to team up in the smartphone market as they try to fight back against the dominance of devices such as Apple's iPhone and those running on Google's Android.

Aidy Lee, president of Microsoft's Mobile Communications Business, demonstrated a preview of the next version of Windows Phone software, code-named "Mango," which he said would be available for the first Windows Phone 7 users this autumn and described as a major upgrade, including the most chapter in Microsoft's mobile phone ambitions.

Microsoft launched the Phone 7 operating system seven months after its attempt to catch up with features found in the iPhone and Android-powered smartphones. But while iPhone 7 has been well-received by reviewers, it has made little headway in the market in part because of the limited number of handsets on which it is available.

Microsoft has not disclosed how many Phone 7 handsets have been sold since its launch, but Lee said the research group estimates that about 1.5 million handsets were sold in the first quarter. Microsoft's first quarter revenue was up 2.5 per cent, but analysts estimate that the company's revenue was up 2.5 per cent, but analysts estimate that the company's revenue was up 2.5 per cent.

Intel joins shift to China as executive takes Beijing brief

By Katherine Mills in Beijing and Heng Jiang

Intel is moving Sean Maloney, one of its most senior executives, to Beijing as chairman of its China operations, reflecting the rise of China as one of the world's most important markets for multinationals.

Mr Maloney, an executive vice-president who has been head of Intel's architecture group in Silicon Valley to California, has in the past been mentioned as a potential successor to Paul Otellini, Intel's chief executive.

"It is an unprecedented move for Intel to place one of its most senior executives in China," the company said. "It underscores the importance of China, which is expected to become the single largest PC consumption market by the end of the decade."

Macom lures Endemol official
Two Telecoms chief, commercial officer of television production company Endemol, has been appointed head of Macom, the pan-European newsgroup, following a search process that has taken more than six months.

Mr Trompeter is expected to join the group in August when Stephen Davidson, currently executive chairman, will become non-executive chairman.

Macom has been without a chief executive since David Montgomery, the group's founder and former chief executive, was ousted by rival shareholders in January.

Mr Montgomery had indicated to Macom's board that he wished to stay on as chief executive but

France Telecom bullish on 4G
France Telecom has stressed its determination to remain the leading broadband provider in France when the government capped the amount of 4G wireless spectrum a single company can buy when they are auctioned at the end of the month.

"Our target is to be the leader in France for 4G," said Jean-Louis Naudin, the company's chief executive, who said the company was "very bullish" on 4G.

Mr Naudin said the company was "very bullish" on 4G.

Mol buy-back to cost €1.9bn
Hungary is set to pay €1.9bn to buy back more than 100m shares of Mol, the oil and gas company, from Surpontos, the company's private equity owner, ending a long-running share purchase plan that started in 2007.

Mr Mol said the company was "very bullish" on 4G.

Hana carrying on with KEB talks
South Korea's Hana Financial Group said it had agreed to continue talks to finalise its bid to buy KEB, a Korean bank, from US buyout fund Lone Star, a further delay on the long-running takeover.

Both Hana and Lone Star want to buy more than 100m shares of KEB, the country's biggest bank, but the deal is being delayed by a court case over disputed regulatory approval.

Lone Star is demanding a higher price for the KEB stake to reflect the bank's value. The bank's recent sale of a stake in Hyundai Engineering & Construction, a Hana affiliate, was reported anonymously.
